Bradstone are also keen suppliers to consumers as well as business and were able to demonstrate their ability to provide best value aesthetically pleasing materials to meet their requirements

Brief

When the new owner of this house purchased the property, the buildings were roofed in red pantiles. The owner decided that he required a roofing slate which was more in keeping with the stonework of the house.

Solution

Bradstone supplied 550 m2 of Old Quarried Slates to replace the red pantiles. Old Quarried Slates blended beautifully with the surrounding area and fitted perfectly with the architecture of the house. Bradstone Old Quarried Slates are a readily available, reconstructed stone alternative, which retain the essential characteristics of the original natural stone slates from which they are moulded. The slates are readily accepted by local authority planners.
